The New Ethics of Insurance

Insurance has an image problem. Each time a claim is denied, a premium is increased, or a loss paid at less than current market value, fingers are wagged at the insurer, even if the action was completely justifiable based on policy language. And, health insurers are not helping the cause. In a recent article, "Seeking Rate Increases, Insurers Use Guesswork," The New York Times cited insurers "seeking wildly differing rate increases in premiums for 2016, with some as high as 85 percent," as reported by the federal government "for the 37 states using Healthcare.gov as their exchange."
